

Hidden Shit is an exercise in cognitive convergence. We offer a trial of the rising struggle, and of the phenomenal snap of the dimensional bounce-up. Just before the break you feel a slow slip, like being pulled into yourself. The psychic field of noumenal objects, where two seemingly distant concepts are suddenly and unexpectedly drawn to union. You are ejected from the bind of synaptic plasticity. The magic eye is your ritual of analogy, ceremony of synthesis.

This work investigates epiphany, the eureka moment, as the result of analysis and as our point of departure. Archimedes found the water displaced, and thus displaced his awareness. Many doors are locked out of habit. Discovery is found to be the adoption of a certain awareness. We broaden our scope and focus our grasp and anticipate a perpetual epiphany.

Adam Cruces

Michael Ray-Von

DIURDIAA

