Twitter bots, what they are, and what is the link to data pollution

Every day, tons and tons of information are uploaded on the Internet. Due to accessibility and simplicity of the process, huge part of the content is uploaded with no necessity or serious reason, such as sharing details about personal life, uploading “dog pictures” and whatsoever. It is done by everyone, with a few exceptions, starting from children and finishing with old people, and mostly by using social networks. The content, shared on social networks, makes a huge part of the whole World Wide Web, and plays quite a big role in the process of data pollution. Data pollution, basically, is the main purpose of social networks - statuses are supposed to be shared, pictures to be uploaded, tweets to be retweeted, amount of likes and comments is nowadays an indicator of worthiness of information.

But not all the social media accounts are real and used by people. There appeared such a phenomena, as fake social networks accounts, and a big part of them consists of automated bots. In this project I’m focusing particularly on Twitter and twitter bots.

Twitter is an online social networking service that enables users to send and read short 140-character messages called “tweets”.

Registered users can read and post tweets, but unregistered users can only read them. Users access Twitter through the website interface, SMS, or mobile device app. Twitter Inc. is based in San Francisco and has more than 25 offices around the world.

Twitter was created in March 2006 and rapidly gained worldwide popularity, with more than 100 million users who in 2012 posted 340 million tweets per day. The service also handled 1.6 billion search queries per day. In 2013 Twitter was one of the ten most-visited websites, and has been described as “the SMS of the Internet.” As of July 2014,

Twitter has more than 500 million users, out of which more than 271 million are active users.

Regards to simple usage system, shortness of the message and almost no limitations (2,400 tweets per day; the daily update limit is further broken down into smaller limits for semi-hourly intervals, retweets are counted as tweets), Twitter has created a perfect environment for running automated scripts and thus creating the twitter bots. 8.5% of the firm's active users are either algorithms or people using apps to aggregate tweets automatically without any human intervention.

So what is a Twitter bot exactly?

A Twitterbot is a program used to produce automated posts on the Twitter microblogging service, or to automatically follow Twitter users. Twitterbots come in various forms. For example, many serve as spam, enticing clicks on promotional links. Others post @replies or automatically "retweet" in response to tweets that include a certain word or phrase. These automatic tweets are often seen as fun or silly. Some Twitter users even program Twitterbots to assist themselves with scheduling or reminders.

It is sometimes desirable to identify when a Twitter account is controlled by a bot. In a 2012 paper, Chu et al. propose the following criteria that indicate that an account may be a bot (they were designing an automated system):

1. "Periodic and regular timing" of tweets;
2. Whether the tweet content contains known spam; and
3. The ratio of tweets from mobile versus desktop, as compared to an average human Twitter user.

There are many different types of Twitter bots and their purposes vary from one to another. For this project I made a selection of 55 Twitter bots and sorted them into following categories:

1. By frequency (every 30 minutes, every hour, every 2 hours, every 3 hours, every day, each time someone tweets to this bot);

2. By content (text bots: every-something - tweeting every word, every unicode character, every phrase from a particular database, etc; generator bots - generating new words/sentences using particular databases; every word is - adding a particular word/sentence to every word in a database; image bots: posting an image independently; changing and posting an image sent to this twitter bot by particular twitter users);

3. By way of interaction (posting tweets independently; interactive - reacting on tweets, sent to them/retweeting)

4. By level of pollution - amount of tweets and images in it.

This publication is created to show a quite interesting and specific aspect of data pollution and is separated into 2 parts: the encyclopaedia itself (list of bots and information about them) and the "timeline", in which, within one particular selected day, I took all the tweets made by these twitter bots to show how actually big is the amount of content produced by them.

Level of data pollution is the crucial feature of these twitter bots, and within this publication their order is following the amount of tweets (and pictures in it), from smallest to the biggest.

here's a cool tip: when you are petting a duckling pet it very lightly because ducklings have very fragile bones. please remember... try not to overdo it.

this might be important: remind yourself of how important you are and greater someone is out there waiting.

hey, remember: avoid touching your face. trust me.

hey, this might be important: the key to becoming successful is finding one thing that you love and mastering that one thing.

here's a cool tip: believe in what you are doing!

don't forget, take a walk alone.

hey -- don't think about it to much otherwise it will ruin the moment.

remember, although you may deserve the moon and the stars, consider economic conditions before going into negotiations.

hey, remember -- read and follow the rules and terms of service of deviantart.

my advice: be aware of your surroundings so you can make the most of things.

careful, don't worry and in particular, don't over-analyze. the simpler you make the purpose of social interactions, the better. :)

Part I: Twitter Bots

This bot is cool because you got a gun. what you gotta gun for? and it's not even 18? you wouldn't need a gun if you just stayed chill smh.

Bots are cool because everything must be gay

This bot is cool because he never wears uniform

This bot is cool because i can eat ice cream for dinner at 12:15 am and do things like listen to music with swear words

Bots are cool because when u aren't feeling that great u get to bury your head in their chest and that helps a lot

This bot is cool because he can tweet now!

This bot is cool because it's a cool guy

This bot is cool because it has the word snacks in it

Bots are cool because eventually they will learn to clean up their own vomit. not any time soon, but eventually. dogs...

This bot is cool because u still in puberty so give the body time

This bot is cool because it absolutely is not

Bots are cool because they wear a certain brand of clothing, knowing they're struggling to pay rent.
